The Presidency and the Supreme Court conference will bring together a wide range of speakers, including scholars, policymakers, journalists, and officials to deliberate the complex relationship between the Court and the Presidency and the impact of that interaction on American society. Panels will focus not only on the political process of Supreme Court nominations and confirmations, but also will examine the Court's influence on social issues, civil rights and governmental power in times of crisis. The conference will also include a keynote address by former Justice Sandra Day O'Connor.
